SINUS BABY ♡

Smoke Purp; Get Head

Holy shit only five more weeks till I can spit in people's mouths again. So close to being vaccinated. I can't wait to see all you mother fuckers on campus because guess what Adela said we are allowed to do next semester. That is right we will be on campus and able to enjoy the sun and the miserable experience that is going to class once again. No more sleeping through zoom classes and cheating on every assignment. All you freshmen that have been doing jack shit at your parents' house and just thinking college is a breeze that you can cheat through and not pay attention.... you are still right, but now you just do it on campus. I will be honest; I have not spent too much time in my college career doing work. Now I still have higher than a 3.0, so take that as you will. Is college just too easy or is old Handie here just smart? I am not sure. I think I am closer to an idiot savant that somehow just backside 180s himself through life. All I really want is to hand all of you sexy folks a Koala and be drunk while doing it. Because what is the point of handing someone a Koala sober? The whole point is to at least act like a functioning alcoholic, if not be one. I am kidding though. Drinking in excess is unsafe but is completely ok to do as a hobby.

So this is where I will give everyone a big safety tip for if you feel inclined to go out and party for the rest of this semester: if you go out and party don't just get a covid test. Stop by the clinic or Planned Parenthood and make sure everything is in tip top shape. Always pull out a jimmy as well and wrap up so nothing can get between you and your lover but sweet lovin'.

With much love to all you miscreants,

Lil Nas X is the Hero we Need but Don't Deserve

Jewish American Pegger

If you haven't heard of Lil Nas X by now, get your head out of your ass and go outside for a bit. Lil Nas X is the savior of our people. He swept us off our feet with his debut country song, Old Town Road, and now he's making our dicks hard and our pussies throb with his latest single, Montero. I mean, seriously. You don't have to be gay to appreciate a sexy man with long, flowing, red hair sliding down a pole in nothing but briefs and thigh-high boots. I mean, seriously. He shouldn't have released this music video for free. This is top-tier softcore porn. I never thought I would fantasize about anal with the Devil, but here I am.

Can we talk about his shoes for a second? I have never seen a sexier sneaker. There is nothing better than wearing pentagrams on your laces and having the helpful drop of human blood for witchcraft later. It is so much easier to hex people on the street if I'm able to conveniently conceal that delicious, lovely drop of blood. Those Karens won't know what hit them until they find themselves clutched in Satan's strong, sensuous grasp.

And seriously, if you're pissed at Lil Nas X's video, get a fucking grip, man. I understand that your Sky Daddy has told you that gay people are disgusting creatures of sin and that you should hate all people that aren't white, straight, and ugly, but I promise you that hating people you don't understand isn't going to get you anywhere good. Shouting racial and homophobic slurs definitely doesn't do you any favors on your so-called "moral compass." If you went to the Egyptian underworld, you would be in deep shit. They'd weigh your heart against a feather, and when your heart would plunge straight down, the jackal would eat your heart and send you to an eternity of damnation. Doesn't seem worth all those slurs and fear mongering, does it? Also fuck you, you religious colonizers. Nobody wants your nasty religion in their country. Everybody was doing just fine before y'all came along and fucked it up.

But I digress. Lil Nas X is this generation's Madonna. The Catholics hated her too and guess what? She did not give a shit and made lots of money. That's the way everybody should live. Piss off the Catholics and make lots of money in the process. Thank you Lil Nas X for guiding us to the light and saving our generation from the sin and oppression of the Catholic Church.

Shrek: A Dive Into The POC Libertarian Experience

Sinus Baby

Since their release on Hulu, I have recently had the honor of rewatching the only two Shrek movies that matter. What I'm sure many can fondly recall as childhood comfort movies, Shrek I and II aged like fine wine. Not only did they capture the attention of a Sinus Child, they now unironically stimulate a deeper, more mature conversation about the unfortunate reality of discrimination and the plight of being a libertarian.

In the movie Shrek, the titular character simply wants to own his own land. He will keep his property from being seized by the government by any means necessary. This is the message of libertarians: demanding land ownership and frothing at the mouth about how the government "does stuff". Shrek even goes to his legislators' home and uses force to protest the use of his land (like any good American would). While this government is clearly a monarchy, it can easily fit within an American perspective, because everything is made for us, right? Across any system, people in power tend to see POC's land as a commodity they are entitled to. This can be seen when Lord Farquaad dumps all of the "impure" beings onto Shrek's land without a second thought. Shrek also displays his libertarian values by not really giving a fuck about others affected by this blatant segregation; he only seeks to help himself and simply wants the problem off his land.

It goes without saying that throughout the first movie, the topic of race (species? character type?) is prevalent, from the banishment of fairytale creatures for being different to how people interact with Shrek himself. He is literally hunted by a lynch mob with pitchforks and torches. He is referred to as a monster from birth, demonized and ostracized. This theme carries through to the second movie, where it is only more emphasized.

Shrek II deals with the plight of interracial couples with bigoted families. Fiona's father, Harold, even calls Shrek an ogre. Their interactions with Shrek play into themes of elitism and keeping bloodlines pure, even though you KNOW Harold and Lillian are cousins and should not be worried about Shrek 'fucking up' their genetics. Also, Harold, you're a fucking frog posing as a human. Projecting much? You're worried about your daughter being an ogre, but she's part frog? Mind your business.

This bigotry is shown when Harold sourly asks if his grandchildren would also be ogres. He proceeds to make stereotypical remarks about ogres, one moment being when Shrek is trying to make himself look better to his elitist in-laws by trying to paint his humble land as more beautiful than it is, and Donkey says "I know you ain't talking about the swamp". Harold remarks how typical it is that an ogre would live in a swamp. Although ogre is not a slur in this universe, Harold and others seem to treat it as such. Real classy, cunt.

Fiona obviously has problems with her identity, as we witnessed in the first movie, fearing that Shrek wouldn't accept her if he knew she was mixed. In Shrek II, we see her naively assuming her bigoted parents would be accepting, getting on Shreks' ass for not trying to get along with her dad, even though Harold struck first with his racist remarks. Shrek states "I don't think I was going to get Daddy's blessing, even if I did want it." Obviously, this is both because Shrek despises the government and is a man of color. Fiona retorts by literally echoing racist remarks. "You're unbelievable! You're behaving like a..." she hesitates, but when Shrek implores her to finish, continues "...Like an ogre!" It's so sad to see someone with such internalized hatred. Yet, it's understandable in her position when she has been raised to feel like half of her identity should be hidden from the world. However she also is coming from a position of privilege, putting Shrek into an uncomfortable position with her racist father, and her own identity doesn't lessen any bigoted remarks towards her husband.

The fairy godmother is clearly a bigot as well, and this is made clear when Shrek comes to ask for a potion to turn him "normal" so that he and Fiona can be together. It's clear he's been unfortunately made to feel as if his identity isn't normal and that he's unworthy of someone like Fiona and the fairy godmother truly twists the knife in. She pulls out fairytale books and scathingly remarks that no ogres are represented in them - citing it as a problem with him and "his kind", rather than a lack of diversity. Obviously, the "I Need A Hero" number is iconic and I can respect that, but I can look past the glamor and see her as she is - a racist old white woman perpetuating discrimination and machismo with her titty-suckling son. I won't even dive into how she's a disgusting capitalist, a fairy AND royalty who's not even providing her workers with dental insurance.

There are plenty more examples, but I implore you to watch these films yourself with an open and analytical mind. Shrek is a filthy libertarian, but he's also been hurt by the world around him and it's understandable that he's often a selfish prick. Wouldn't you be if your entire existence was demonized and scrutinized? The undertones are hardly subtle, and truthfully I don't think it's a far reach to say that Shrek is what radicalized us.

Best Butthole

Buster Hymen

I was driving through the Central Valley when I saw a sheep with the most glorious butthole. It was spectacular! A stark contrast of darkness against its white wool. It was so marvelous I almost crashed my car because I was distracted. Don't worry thots, my boyfriend proceeded to yell at me about getting distracted by a sheep's butthole and almost crashing the car. But I couldn't help it! The sheep's dark skin made it look gaping. In all honesty, it could have been the sheep's dark tail but I like to think it was its butthole. I've never seen a more marvelous hole, or human or animal. Sheep are the best. They are cute, fluffy, and gentle for the most part. I wish I could own a sheep. Preferably a super fluffy one with a great butthole.

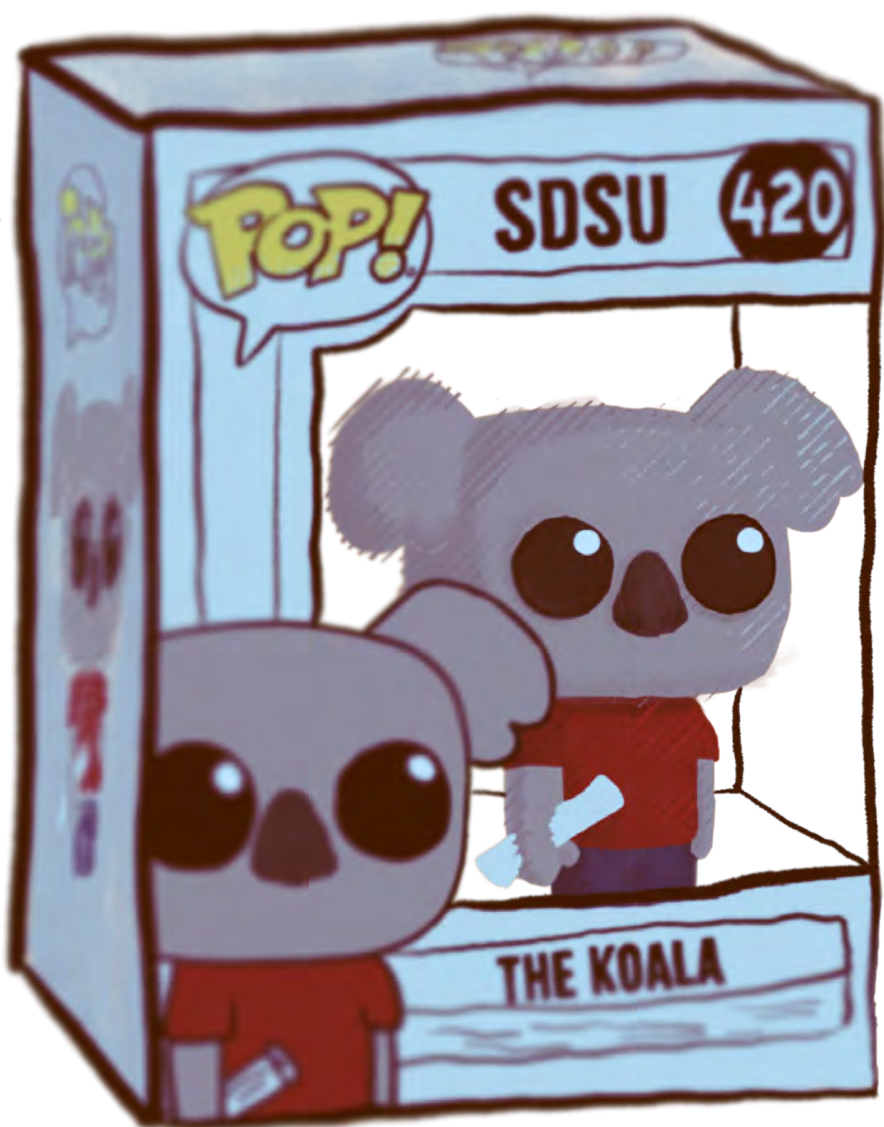

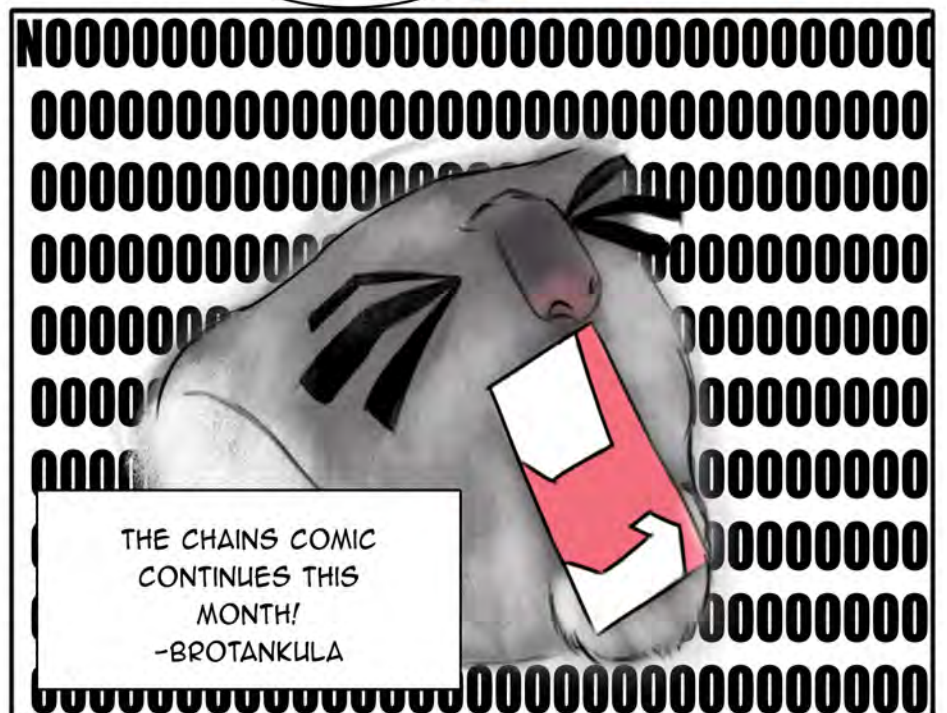

Sheep have the most superior butthole of all farm animals. Compared to boring cow, pigs, and goat buttholes that are everywhere, sheep have the best butthole because they're different. The contrast of the dark anus against their white wool is fabulous. Buttttt, I have to award chickens second place. Chickens have fun feathers surrounding their bootyhole. Plus, they also lay yummy eggs from that same hole.

I know what you're thinking: Chickens lay eggs from their butthole? What about cow buttholes?

It is true, chicken eggs and their poop come out of the same hole. However, something happens with chicken organs so when the egg comes out it supposedly doesn't touch the poop. But still, always wash your fresh eggs so you don't get salmonella from any poop particles.

Don't get me wrong, cows are fun! The ladies have a little milk-filled tummy glove! However, my tummy and butthole are lactose intolerant, and cows are smelly with their methane burps and farts. So cows are awarded third place.

Therefore, I award sheep: Best Butthole Award for Farm Animals.

Bribery is bad but we want beer!! (AS drama)

Manson Family Vacation

As you might have heard but also probably not because nobody actually cares about student government, we've got some Associated Students tea for y'all!!!

So if you haven't heard, The Daily Aztec recently published a terribly written article with the most misleading headline in the history of journalism about the whole ass mess we refer to as the AS election. I'll spare you the pain of reading the DA, and spill the tea right here, right now.

Basically, some girl named Bella was running for president with the campaign strategy of bribing fraternities with 30 racks of beer in exchange for votes. We applaud Bella for going about this election like any real politician would; by utilizing the art of bribery, lies, and deceit! Boy, aren't politics classy!?

Anyway, the other presidential candidate whose name might be Ashley but I don't care enough to fact check found out and got upset about the frat bribery. Ashley then threatened to file a complaint or some shit against Bella and her team, which kinda forced home-girl to step down from the race in order to save their reputations. I mean, not that it worked, but... A for effort.

Flash forward a bit; some meetings took place to discuss the matter, and Bella and her gang tried to claim that Ashley was blackmailing them with her knowledge of beer-gate, and Ashley was still probably pretty pissed about that whole thing to begin with. Go democracy!

Also, somehow the IFC president got involved because this is sdsu and those assholes just have to make everything about them. I don't really care enough to get into it but shoutout to him I guess.

So to sum up the meetings, there was a lot of complaining and a lot of pointless arguing. I think that every formal complaint made was "tabled," which is executive lingo for "let's just say we'll deal with it later and hope that everyone forgets about the whole thing." Ultimately, and to absolutely nobody's surprise, nothing productive actually happened. I think Ashley's our president now, but again, I don't care enough to fact check.

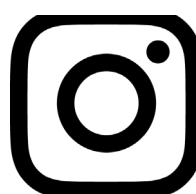

Here at the koala we think everyone's shit and endorse nobody, and although we absolutely do NOT condone bribery, I've gotta say I'm just a little bit offended and confused as to why the koala wasn't offered any beer. Not that we'd go for it or anything because we're an honorable organization... but Bella if you're out there, we like natty light and our dm's are open so hit us up.

Wasting Away Again In Cabo San Lucas

I'm sweating. It's dark and someone turned the AC way too fucking high but I'm still sweating. I feel an elbow crushing down on my neck and a knee inching way too close to my balls. I'm at the bottom of a five person cuddle puddle in a puke covered Mexican hotel room and I'm still not seeing straight. I push Espap off me, scoot Snick Pevins to the side, and slither out of bed to the bathroom. Mexican alcohol gives you hangovers, but not in the way American alcohol does. It's less physically discomforting, but it has its own sinister effects. I get to the bathroom and watch the buzzing lightbulb flicker on, revealing a monster. Me. My eyes are puffy and my face is beat red from how hard I puked in that five star resort last night. We snuck in under the name of Smith, "Charge it all to room 3021" we said. It was the second night in a row we did that. When the resort is that nice they don't catch on to a goddamn thing. Suddenly my reflection is cut off like a frenchman's head and something draws me away from the mirror. A smell, some god awful smell. Be'a Pagatta had been here, ruining my toilet again. When I took a shit in her bathroom and didn't flush I thought it was one hell of a joke, but I had no idea how much fiber she had in her diet. I've been losing the battle ever since.

I stumble helplessly through the pitch black room onto the balcony. Night's receding, and the morning is reaching up to grab me from behind like that lonely milf last night. I don't care if it's only 5 a.m., I'm not getting back in bed with that goddamn writhing heap of sweaty corpses. They're all faceless lumps right now, anyway. They'll have faces soon, but not now. I wonder if they'll wake up in time for breakfast. We haven't gotten breakfast anywhere other than the hotel restaurant all week, I'm not gonna stop now. They said you couldn't get chicken fried steak for breakfast every day in Mexico, said it was against the law. Well lock me up. Shit, they said pissing in public was illegal down here too, but here I am, a free man waiting for this goddamn restaurant to open. All I need is a chicken fried steak and a Mexican femboy to rail out and I'll be set.

I knew it wasn't gonna be easy to come down here. I'm making a hell of a sacrifice, you know. The whole goddamn thing is to send a message anyways. After Adela stole our spring break, I had to do something. Some people petition for their little protests. I kiss every stranger I can in greasy Cabo clubs and fuck old married couples on their once a year vacation. Methods of fighting the establishment vary. I'm doing the socially responsible thing down here, I really am. My friends and I coming here is a hell of a selfless act. They're really pulling their weight too. I mean Christ, some of them went and had an orgy with an NFL player. Chlamydia be damned, they did it. I'd name names, but it'd get redacted. A lot's being redacted these days, but god speed to them. If that doesn't say "Fuck you, Adela" I'm not sure what does.

Jesus I'm hungry, I wonder if there's time to find Raft before breakfast. After he got in that local's trunk we haven't seen him since. It's not worth worrying about and we know it, Raft is always getting himself into things like this, hasn't come out with a scratch yet. We'll end up giving him more shit for kissing Jay on the lips a few days ago than we will for hopping in a strangers trunk and riding off into the night. Not that I've never kissed Raft on the lips before. We have a few more days here and the thought of getting up and doing it all over again for the fifth day in a row gives me welt-sized goosebumps. There was a time when I thought a bender of this caliber wasn't possible, but now I know it's necessary. There are just some things that need to be done, this is one of them. I'll be alright after a chicken fried steak. Thank god it's just two hours 'til breakfast.

Prince Phillip's death leaves vacancy in Queen's Guard

Rat Junior

April 9th of 2021, Prince Phillip, Duke of Edinburgh, laid his final rest at the age of 99. In the wake of Phillip's death, the royal staff's posture guards have been relieved of their duties.

In 2017, the Queen's Guard appointed a special task force to keep the corpse-like shell of the late Prince Philip erect in a successful attempt to make him appear alert while his body decayed in the years before his final moments.

The Queen's Guard Posture Guard Task Force, was inspired by popular 1989 film, Weekend at Bernie's.

The Posture Guards will be officially relieved from their duties after the funeral for Prince Phillip. The Queen's Guard report that the Posture Task Force will be sent out via parade. More on this to come.
